New York, 1.—The Traces argues the necessity of the immediate extension of some form of government over Alaska. It says: A party of real estate dealers could take Alaska from the government paid and with political power like that formerly possessed by the East India companies make it for themselves a paying investment. Nothing like this, of course, can or ought to be done, but the possibility will serve to overthrow the presence that Alaska is worthless. The revenues could easily be increased to $500,000, or double the cost of a territorial government. Nobody can dispute that it is rich in fish, fars, timber and minerals. Without reviving the ludicrous extravegances of Seward and Summer, concerning the wheat bearing properties and fine, mild climate of Alaska, it is enough to say that its fish and furs would easily support a rar larger population, estable protection and the comforts of an orderly government be assured.

The question involved was the consultational legislatus, excluding colored citizens from Jury service in courts of that state. This court holds that when a colored citizen from Jury service in courts of that state. This court holds that when a colored citizen is tried for his life by a jury from which citizens of his own race are by a state statute expressly excluded, he is denied the equal protection of the law guaranteed by the third clause of the fourteenth amendment to the constitution, and that the state statute denying him such right is repugnant to said constitutional prevision.
